| 1. Introduction is well written, brief, interesting, and compelling. It motivates the work and provides a clear statement of the examined issue. It presents and overview of the thesis. | Outstanding
Very good
Acceptable
Somewhat deficient
Very deficient | The introduction consists mostly of rhetorical questions that fail to unify the thesis with a comprehensive argument. |
| 2. The thesis shows the author’s appropriate knowledge of the subject matter through the background/review of literature. The author presents information from a variety of quality electronic and print sources. Sources are relevant, balanced and include critical readings relating to the thesis or problem. Primary sources are included (if appropriate). | Outstanding

Final Comments & Questions

This thesis is excellently written and researched. The author is to be congratulated on her hard work and depth of knowledge. There are minor inconsistencies with the References page in terms of title punctuation. Also, I find the introduction insufficiently revised as it is still composed of largely rhetorical questions, rather than an argumentative thesis which I communicated to the author would be necessary for a truly excellent diploma. The conclusion seemed a bit better, but I think this impression was enhanced by the fact that it followed the section which discussed popular culture. Thus, evidence for Lincoln being an “icon” was more or less obvious. Historical thesis works are notoriously hard to make argumentative as the authors feel it is more or less their function to describe historical events and personalities. But this fall short of the mark when it comes to academic writing. There are plenty of historians who can argue that Lincoln was a violator of the constitution and even a war criminal. In the defense, I will ask the author to compare her vision of Lincoln with more contentious voices and more or less argue that he was a “good” president, if not the greatest American president.

Suggested mark 1 or 2.
